Chasing Logan and Janessa

It often happens this time of year. I have some version of this dream from last week. Logan and Janessa are running down 35th Ave. They are clutching laptops to their chests and looking over their shoulders. I'm half a block behind, chasing and screaming. I've got pages from the vocabulary book in my hand, waving frantically and yelling, "Wait! Wait! I've got just one more thing to teach you! JUST...ONE...MORE...THING!" You get the picture. There is still much to learn in fourth grade. In the weeks ahead I will attempt a balance among essential tasks, finishing units and enjoying our time together. For this reason, our routines will likely be shifted... two writing lessons one day, double science the next. Look to this and the OLG school newsletter for important reminders. See the Oral Presentation Schedule below. I'll work to record presentations to be shared with family and friends.

Science:

Our first pupae formed in early week. We compared our mealworms/pupae with mealworms stored in the faculty room refrigerator. How does air temperature impact the life-cycle states of the mealworm? Is it temperature or light that has the impact? What other factors must be considered? Great questions from our fourth grader. On Thursday we were able to watch a beetle emerge from the pupae stage. I always have been a Beatles fan. Exciting!

Math:

We're moving to Chapter 8, Adding and Subtracting Decimals. This will be quick, with an emphasis on solving real world problems. We'll skip the end of chapter test and move on (or teach two chapters at once) to Chapter 9, Angles.
